Easier to emoji-fy your messages

Apple spent a lot of resources making iMessage and the Messages app way more visual in iOS 10. For starters, emoji sent by themselves are now three times bigger. And for emoji die-hards, iOS 10 can now suggest which words in your text you can substitute for a corresponding emoji.

After writing your message, tap on the emoji button and every instance where a word can be replaced by an emoji will be highlighted. Simply tap to replace and send your emoji-fied message.

Hints/Tips

Visual link-sharing in Messages

In iOS 10, Apple has also visualized links sent in Messages. When you send a URL, Messages automatically turns it into a visual preview with a headline and image pulled from the website. Similarly, you can send a link to YouTube or Vimeo and have the recipients watch the video in-line.

You can also send tracks from Apple Music that the recipient can play without leaving Messages. There's even an iMessage app to make it easier to find and share songs from Apple Music (more on iMessage apps later).

Every URL we tested in iOS 10 Messages showed up as a visual link, even Spotify tracks, although much to no one's surprise, you're not able to play those in-line.
